You are an Auditory Learner and an Auditory Learner listens to verbal instructions and remembers by forming the sounds of words. You find it easy to remember names but forget faces. You often do well working out solutions or problems by talking them out. In most circumstances, you need to hear yourself speak to effectively commit to memory. You may find yourself reading aloud instead of reading silently, talking to yourself, or repeating instructions to make sure you understand them.

Ask many questions in class to gain understanding. The discussion cements the information for you. You are easily distracted by noise and often need to work where it is relatively quiet. However, you benefit from lecture style instruction, dialogues, group discussions and interactions, and using audio-visual recordings.

Auditory Learning Methods

Study Tips:

1. Your notes may be poor because you prefer to listen. After the lesson, add to your notes by talking to others or using your textbook.
2. Consider finding a partner whose notes you can study from to fill in things you missed in class. You may also record class lectures with the teacher’s permission.
3. Aid memorizing facts or dates by using a song, rap, or rhythm.
4. Make your own audio recording with key words/concepts and review them whenever you can to be ready for a test. Also supplement reading assignments with audio books whenever possible.
5. When studying, read notes or books aloud. Repeat the facts with your eyes closed.
6. Join a study group or find a study partner to review information, notes, or texts.

Test Tips:

Imagine you are explaining the key concepts to someone else. Speak your answers aloud or inside your head as you repeat them to yourself to write answers.

Spend time in quiet places to recall key facts.

Listen to recorded notes or lectures.

Best Test Types for Auditory Learners:

- Listening comprehension and oral exams.

Worst Test Types:

- Reading comprehension with limited time.
